MENOPAUSE
Managing Symptoms, Improving Health.

Talk to me. I can help.
Every woman’s journey through menopause is unique. While some women experience a relatively symptom free transition, for others there may be difficulties and troublesome symptoms. There are a variety of treatment options available which may help women to continue to have a rich, rewarding and active life during this period of transition.

Common Symptoms and Discomforts

Across cultures, certain symptoms and discomforts are very common during menopause:

- Hot flushing
- Night sweats
- Joint and muscle aches and pains
- Insomnia or other sleep disturbances
- Memory changes
- Mood swings
- Vaginal dryness
- Bladder control issues
- Changes in sexuality

It is important to talk to your health care provider if you are experiencing these symptoms and they are impacting on your quality of life.

Lifestyle Choices and Changes

Mid-life presents the perfect opportunity to consider lifestyle change. Implementing these changes will promote healthier aging, and may help to alleviate some of the troublesome symptoms of menopause:

- Regular exercise (both aerobic and weights)
- Smoking cessation
- Healthy dietary choices
- Moderation of alcohol consumption
- Relaxation and stress management techniques

Hormone Medication

Contrary to some of the information in the media, hormone therapy, when used correctly, does not increase a woman’s health risks. For some women, hormone therapy is considered the best choice for management of her menopausal symptoms. The goal is to use the lowest dose of hormone medication for the shortest time possible to help relieve moderate to severe menopausal symptoms.

Non-hormonal Medication

Some women may require non-hormonal medication to manage mood swings, depression, sleep disturbances, joint aches and pains or hot flushes. Speak to your health care provider for more information.
